DIRECTOR'S NOTE:

Welcome to Nunsense... a show that proves two very important things:

1. Musical theatre and convent life are apparently more similar than you might think.
2. If you give a group of talented performers a stage and permission to be ridiculous, wonderful things happen.

When we started working on this show, we knew one thing for certain: Nunsense is supposed to be fun. Not “polite chuckle” fun. I mean full-on, lean-back-in-your-seat, laugh-until-you-snort fun. This show doesn’t whisper its jokes. It rings the church bell, throws on tap shoes, and invites the audience to join the chaos.

The room we built this show in was exactly that kind of place. Rehearsals were full of laughter, absurd character choices, moments where someone tried something completely ridiculous... and it somehow made the scene even better. The energy of this cast turned every rehearsal into its own little comedy revival meeting, and I’m fairly certain the walls of the theatre have now heard more nun jokes than any building reasonably should.

Our incredible cast, the “nuns” you’ll see tonight, embraced every ounce of silliness, heart, and humanity in these characters. They committed fully to the bit, and I couldn’t be more grateful for their talent, their humor, and their willingness to dive headfirst into the joyful madness of this show.

A production like this also doesn’t happen without an amazing team behind the scenes. Our crew and production team have worked tirelessly to make the magic happen, often while I stood nearby pretending I knew exactly what I was doing.

And then there are two people who deserve a very special thank you: Kennedy and Sarah H. Quite frankly, they saved me daily. Whether it was solving problems, keeping things moving, or gently reminding me of the 47 things I had forgotten that day, they are the reason this production stayed on track. Every theatre needs people like them, and I am endlessly grateful.

At the end of the day, theatre like this exists for one reason: joy. It’s a chance to gather in a room together, laugh together, and leave feeling just a little lighter than when we walked in.

We certainly had a blast creating this show, and we hope you enjoy watching it just as much as we enjoyed bringing it to life.

Now sit back, relax, and prepare yourselves.

The sisters are about to begin.

- Brandon Stauffer
